The Methodist people are agitating the project of rebuilding their church expending five or six thousand dollars. One of the members offers to give $1,000 toward the enterpriseand others within and without the society promise very liberal help. The present church was built 50 years ago, but is quite good yet. The house will either be raised to make a vestry and other convenience, or enlarged in some direction for that purpose.

By the burning out of one of the chimneys at the school house, one afternoon recently, the wood-work near the base of the chimney took fire and only a prompt discovery saved a conflagration. The soot had fallen down in great quantities and in some way took fire and burned at the bottom of the chimney, creating intense heat. The same thing occurred two years ago in the Robinson block. RHYMES For Hard Times.

Kind reader pray, do look this way, It will not take you long, To read a line, though not so fine

As poet's choicest song. But when the price of all that's nice, Produced upon the farm, Has fallen low, a dunce would know

The people's need is great indeed, When Democrats have sway; The tide has turned, and we have learned That trouble is to pay.

No one has cash to spend for trash Of that we have enough; But all must plan as best they can, To buy the best of stuff.

Then let me say, just come this way. You'll not regret you came, And at our store you'll find much more, Than I have space to name.

Of dry goods fine, a nice new line

We've just received to-day; Men's clothing too, all fresh and new, No shouldy any way. We've Johnson garn, to knit or darn, In colors all so gan :

And flannels bright, a pretty sight Upon a winter's day. I think you'll find the choicest kind Of teas and spices here.

Tobacco, too, to smoke or chew,

At prices never dear.

Your coffee's ground out by the pound. Whene'er you wish to buy; Our earthern ware, so white and fair, Is never marked too high,

So I will close, but first propose, You patronize our trade. Now make a call good people all, Who read these verses o'er.

For much is made if you but trade

At thought of bargains made:

E. O. RANDALL'S STORE.

To mention half, would make you laugh.
